Kim Yuna figure skating controversy and career end
02/23/14 4:56PM

As more information about the judging panel during Thursday's women's figure skating program at Sochi is released, accusations of home field inflation grow. Despite her nearly perfect free skate, former Olympic figure skating champion Kim Yuna (YUHN-ah) was outscored by Russia's Adelina Sotnikova (ah-deh-LEE-nah sot-nee-KOH-vah), who won the gold after skating a technically superior program. After being awarded the silver medal, Kim stated that she had done all she wanted and was glad that it was over. The South Korean athlete then announced her retirement from the sport, still holding world records from the 2010 Olympics.
